

Law Firm Audit Policy

The current foreclosure crisis has brought into focus an area of foreclosure defense that, until now, was rarely controversial – the right and power of an assignee of mortgage indebtedness, acting for itself or through an agent, to foreclose and collect on real property. The mortgage securitization process, which includes records of mortgage transfers, were sometimes not created and/or maintained, and often can be difficult (if not impossible) to find. A mortgage audit can show if your note was securitized by Wall Street and all the parties associated with the mortgage securitization process. Additionally, a mortgage audit can reveal if a likelihood of fraud exists with mortgage documents on file at the local county clerk's office. Foreclosure defense is developing in the aftermath of the mortgage crisis, and the law firm is at the cutting-edge of using mortgage audits as part of their comprehensive foreclosure defense strategies.

The law firm believes Forensic and Securitization Loan Audits are an irreplaceable tool in properly defending a wrongful foreclosure, attempting to remove clouds on title, or just finding out who may claim to own someone's home loan.
